

colours

bruises appear and
she tends her garden

the flowers a kaleidoscope
as she forgets
the colours of her cancer.

the roses are memories
of an earlier spring

a silent little girl

her whitened face
among the black
wet reeds.

GREG BUTTON